Introduction

The War has led to over 50,000 casualties in Gaza, ultimately devastating its urban landscape and displacing the huge Gaza population. Despite of president trump' s efforts to end Gaza war, through a deal, however both parties are rigid in their own stance while the new-born children are dying due to stunting and wasting, as according to al Jazeera around 66 children died due to malnutrition and food aid shortage. These circumstances ultimately suggest a diplomatic failure and absence of a mutual consensus.

Challenges to Peace Process in Region

One of the most prominent issues in peace talks is the political division among Palestinian leaders, especially between Hamas and the Palestinian Authority, which weakens their negotiating power. Moreover, the international actors including the role of United States, European Union, and neighbouring Arab nations has been inconsistent, as changing priorities affect their mediation efforts, further escalating the tensions instead of helping to resolve them.

The ongoing humanitarian crisis in Gaza, worsened by the blockades and military actions, not only worsens their immediate needs but also decreases trust in diplomatic negotiations. Additionally, there is a significant lack of grassroots engagement in peace initiatives. While top-level diplomacy has not succeeded, community-level dialogue is missing, which limits the chances for lasting peace. Economic differences between Israel and Gaza also create a power imbalance that hinders negotiations, while discussions about economic cooperation are largely ignored in peace talks.

Disarming fear and Embracing peace in the ongoing Tensions

Despite significant challenges, several paths to peace exist. Supporting grassroots initiatives that foster dialogue and understanding between Israeli and Palestinian communities is essential. Programs that promote cultural exchanges and collaboration can help build trust and reduce stereotypes. Economic cooperation through joint ventures in technology and agriculture can create interdependence and mutual benefits, easing tensions.

International diplomacy also needs a renewal, focusing on including all parties in the peace process. A comprehensive peace framework addressing borders, refugees, and the status of Jerusalem is crucial for a lasting resolution. Additionally, involving regional powers can promote dialogue and provide security assurances, enhancing the negotiation environment.

Conclusion

The Gaza-Israel conflict poses significant challenges to peace, rooted in historical problems and aggravated by current political situations. Although the path to peace is fraught with challenges, focusing on community projects, economic partnerships, and robust international dialogue can help create solutions for coexistence in the region.
